Mayor Robyn Holmes, Cook Shire Council

Mayor Robyn Holmes's journey into local government began in 2016 when she was elected as a Councillor for Cook Shire, motivated by a deep and longstanding commitment to her community. Her tenure saw her rise to the position of Deputy Mayor, a role she held for six years prior to winning the mayoralty in the 2024 elections.

With a career spanning more than 25 years in the Queensland Police Service in an administrative capacity, Mayor Holmes brings a wealth of experience in organisational administration, governance and community engagement to her role. Her dedication to community safety extends beyond her professional life, with long-term involvement in rural fire brigades giving her firsthand experience in disaster management and emergency response.

Mayor Holmes is a committed volunteer and active community member, having served and continuing to serve on committees and working groups of various sporting and community organisations across the region. This grassroots involvement reflects the same values that have defined her public life — a genuine investment in the people and communities of Far North Queensland.

As Mayor of Cook Shire, the largest local government area in Queensland at 105,718 square kilometres, Mayor Holmes leads a council responsible for one of the most geographically vast and diverse communities in the state.
